Chapter 1
Pretty Little Party

A pudgy caterer with impeccably manicured hands thrust a tray of steaming, gooey cheese into Spencer Hastings's face. "Baked Brie?"

Spencer selected a cracker and took a big bite. Delicious. It wasn't every day that a caterer served her baked Brie in her own kitchen, but on this particular Saturday night, her mother was throwing a party to welcome a new family to the neighborhood. Mrs. Hastings hadn't been in the mood to play hostess the last few months, but she'd had a burst of social enthusiasm.

As if on cue, Veronica Hastings bustled into the room in a cloud of Chanel No. 5, fastening dangling earrings to her earlobes and sliding a large diamond ring on her right finger. The ring was a recent purchase—her mother had exchanged every piece of jewelry Spencer's dad had ever bought her for all-baubles. Her ash-blonde hair hung straight and smooth to her even though she’d had a team scour the house only an hour before. “Maybe you should see if she needs anything.”

“Who?” Spencer wrinkled her nose. She hadn’t asked anyone to work tonight’s event. Usually her mom hired students with Hollis College, the university down the road, to do it.

Mrs. Hastings let an impatient sigh and checked her flawless reflection in the stainless steel refrigerator door. “Emily Fields. I’ve set her up by the study.”

Spencer stiffened. Emily was here? She certainly hadn’t
